Honda Acura Honda Honda Moto Guzzi Located in England, Haynes Motor Co. has been selling motorcycle and automobile parts since it was founded in 1913 by Major William Haynes. Haynes held a majority stake in Honda Motor Co. Ltd. in the early 1990s, only to sell it back in 1999 in order to focus on the repair and maintenance market. The company was named after the industrialist William Haynes, and was initially located on Birmingham's Russell Street before moving to its current address on Smethwick Road in 1985. The company continues to operate as a wholly owned subsidiary of the Haynes Worldwide Corporation, which is located in Tennessee. Haynes continues to operate as a motorcycle and automobile parts supplier today, and now has two separate retail outlets on Birmingham's Newhall Street. Haynes Motor Co. Ltd. Haynes Honda Motorcycles Honda Motorcycles was founded in the 1950s as a small motorcycle spare parts importer by Yoshio Toyoda, who with his sons, acquired the old British parts supplier of Ratsey and Butler in 1958, renaming the company as Haynes Honda Motorcycles to prevent consumer confusion with Haynes Industries Limited. The company continues to operate as a motorcycle spare parts retailer today, and was incorporated as a car dealership in 1968. In the 1970s, the company was briefly involved in the motorcycle trade, when a Motohatchi factory was set up to produce high-end Haynes-branded machines under licence, and later a Honda factory was established in San Antonio, Texas to produce the same machines. Why the Haynes name? When Haynes Motor Co. Ltd. began trading in the early 1950s, the first Haynes motorcycle was a Matchless, made by Birmingham-based Matchless International Ltd. Haynes had been developing motorcycles for a number of years, but always struggled to find financial backing. In 1953, Wilhemina 'Bill' Haynes left the family business and borrowed money from his mother's friend, who turned out to 0cc13bf012 honda crf manual guide honda crf manual guide Honda CRF R Complete and easy-to-use repair manual for Honda CRF R. The CRF was Honda's first full-size motorcycle designed for the Japanese domestic market.

The CRF125 was introduced in 1988 as a middleweight roadster for inexperienced riders and is now a collectors item. CRF350R and CRF450R are the latest in a long line of models that sought to merge the attributes of a sports bike with those of a comfortable tourer. A highly successful two-stroke twin delivering up to 110 HP, the CRF is still a well-regarded choice for sport tourers. The CRF has been built at both Honda's Tochigi and Anna factories in Japan since its initial release. Over 1.4 million owners can't be wrong. The CRF is still an extremely reliable motorcycle, making it popular for track days, commuting, long distance touring, and as a daily rider for thousands of enthusiasts each year. The CRF is unique in its class in many ways. First is the factory specification 4-piston Brembo brakes. In addition, the CRF's suspension is unique, with only 6 degrees of front wheel travel and 4 degrees of rear. These changes resulted in the CRF becoming very comfortable for more inexperienced riders. For 2005 and 2006 a CRF50 was introduced. This was a reasonably sized twin for the smaller rider, and CRF500 represented the performance of the larger CRF series. CRF Experiences CRF's are long lived, due to Honda's manufacturing process using hardened steel and aluminum aircraft quality parts in the cylinder head, camshaft and clutch cover. Honda's proprietary engine technology has improved the lives of its three-cylinder twins, and CRF's have been known for their durability for over 20 years. A testament to CRF's durability is that, in spite of having an unbreakable engine, and hundreds of thousands of miles put on Honda's test track, there are only a few hundred known failures. Along with being known for its longevity, the CRF is one of the most popular motorcycles to go off road. The CRF has long been the only motorcycle able to go cross country without fear of rough terrain. While some need more comfort, more experience, or more of the Honda dependability, CRF owners just love the motorcycle for its character and capability.
