The aim of this study was to identify the determinants of health-related quality of life (HRQL) in multiple sclerosis (MS) patients. The study involved a cohort of 229 MS patients and 36 healthy controls. Data were collected at baseline, 6 months, and 12 months. The Short Form 36 (SF-36) was used to evaluate HRQL. The EDSS was used to assess disability. Multiple regression analysis was performed to evaluate HRQL determinants. In all groups, EDSS and HRQL were correlated. The strongest correlations were found with Physical Function and Role Physical in the MS group. In the MS group, MS Severity and Cognitive Function were the most important determinants of HRQL. The duration of illness and EDSS had a significant impact on HRQL during the first year of the disease, and the presence of relapses during the first 2 years was associated with a decline in HRQL. Disability, cognitive impairment, and age were also correlated with HRQL. Cognitive impairment was the most important factor in the regression model for physical HRQL. Cognitive impairment and the severity of the disease, rather than disability, are the determinants of mental HRQL. Age is also an important determinant of mental HRQL. The presence of symptoms related to relapses and relapses themselves also influence the HRQL. not understand the implications, or even seek to understand, which makes them like so many visitors to the park. Apparatus for the above mentioned purpose are known from "Utensils, Klemme Zeitungs-Verlag", 51 (1986), pages 22 to 24, and "Handbuch der Verarbeitungsindustrie", Vol. 11, pages 103 to 105, H. B. Hull. The apparatus of the known art has the disadvantage that only a limited number of different size and shape pieces can be achieved simultaneously. For these reasons, there is a need for apparatus with which a plurality of different size and shape pieces can be transported while providing an even heat distribution and to prevent evaporation and contamination of the pieces. Further, it is known that the transportation of pieces with steam and/or hot air results in condensation which causes drop-offs. Also, it is a known fact that a plurality of pieces are generally arranged in boxes, whereby pressure and temperature conditions in the boxes can vary from very good to very bad. In particular, transporting pieces with a very large size requires the deposition of energy for a very long period of time, whereby the pieces drop-off and can not be transported further. The energy to supply the steam and the hot air is quite high. This leads to a general or complete drop-off of the piece. Further, it is a known fact that the supply of the steam and the hot air to the piece requires distances between the piece and the steam and hot air supply, that do not permit advantageous conditions of the supplied steam and hot air. The dropping of the piece on the transport device is therefore unavoidable. Further, it is known that the transportation of pieces with steam and/or hot air results in the condensation of steam and/
