Alternative splicing and phosphorylation of the ATP-regulated K+ channel (KATP) encoded by sulfonylurea receptor 1 (SUR1). An assessment by targeted mutation. Voltage-gated K+ channels form key components of excitable tissues that have pore-forming K+ selective (K+) permeability pathways and a variety of regulatory (R) subunits. Channels have been subclassified into two groups: those that are inhibited and those that are activated by MgATP2-, MgATP/ADP-ribose- and guanosine-5'-triphosphate (GTP)-binding proteins. The effector subunit for MgATP2-dependent channels is a G protein-coupled receptor termed the sulfonylurea receptor. This protein is a member of the inward rectifier family of channels. In this report, we show that the splice variant 1 of the gene encoding SUR1 (SUR1-1) is present in all tissues analyzed, whereas splice variant 2 (SUR1-2) is not expressed in normal adult mouse tissues. We also present evidence that SUR1-1 is a novel kinase that modifies the function of the sulfonylurea receptor. We have used an over-expressed form of SUR1 to coexpress with the pancreatic K+ channel in Xenopus oocytes and analyzed the effect of MgATP. MgATP enhanced the K+ permeability of these channels. MgATP increased the current of K+ channels with SUR1-1 without affecting the current of channels that were expressed with SUR1-2. The increase in channel current was prevented by pretreatment of the channels with [gamma-32P]MgATP and by inclusion of the specific antagonist N-benzyl-3-(p-azidophenyl)propionamidine.Advertisement No decision made on Zagreb-Rijeka route Share Shares Copy Link Copy The Croatians and Slovaks who helped build the largest motorway in the world in one of Europe's largest lakes, a new bar and a changing of the guard at the Miljacka bridge for Olympic sailing and motor racing in Rijeka are among the first natural tourist sights the region promises to offer.
