Ticket to Ride is a strategy game of building and connecting train routes across Europe, one route at a time. Each game is driven by two players, who trade the cards they have in their hands to build the routes they need. The game is about trading, bluffing and spying to build the most connections and claim victory! Train routes come in several varieties with different lengths: Short, Standard and Long. Quickly make the best connections to fulfill your Destination. Travel through towns and cities as you build the routes, connecting them by dealing the cards that will make that journey possible. Your opponent builds their routes too, making connections at the train depots that you have already built. The more connections you have, the more Stations and Routes you can collect. Each game brings a mix of new challenges - travel through Europe's historical cities, and use the cool new cards of Europe. Travel through the cities of London, Paris, Amsterdam, Vienna, Copenhagen, Moscow and Berlin, and embark on a new train adventure! With Ticket to Ride: Europe, the exciting world of Route Building gets even bigger! Ticket to Ride: Europe comes with a fun-filled new map and many new and exciting locations, all packed into a brand new theme. If you think route building and train travel are old hat, think again! Europe has some wonderful new locations, including exciting long and short routes through the cities of Berlin, Moscow, London, Paris, Vienna, Amsterdam, Copenhagen and Vienna. You will also find many new challenges in form of the exciting Tunnel and Ferry expansion cards. There's also more Tickets now available, and two exciting new powerful Promos that will shake up the game in interesting new ways!

Q: Why does the `shared_ptr` not show up in Visual Studio 2012's diagnostic templates? Visual Studio 2012 (aka VS11) includes a bunch of very useful diagnostic templates, like `operator>` for this: I'm wondering why in both cases Visual Studio 2012 doesn't include the `for shared_ptr`. I'm not really good with template programming, but my guess is that it's because it's a macro and there's no automatic registration of `shared_ptr`. But it just looks strange that in both cases VS2012 includes the full signature for the template of a given type, but doesn't include the part which is not a parameter type. Is there some reason for this? I'm using `c9d1549cdd`

Dummy function ---- `[_running_functions]] == Running Functions` The `>` library provides the ``NewFunction`` and ``Run`` methods on the ``Manager`` object. The ``Run`` method in turn calls the ``Run`` method on the ``FunctionConfig`` configuration object associated with the function. Both methods take a map as an argument to configure the function, including named arguments. The following example shows how these calls are made. `[source,ocaml] ---- let config = Config.parse_string __DIR__ ^/resources/project-manager.toml let manager = Manager.new_default manager ~config () let manager = Manager.new config ~mode:Mode.InstrumentationManagerManager manager = Manager.new_batch config ~mode:Mode.InstrumentationManagerManager let config = { Config. { "dependencies": ["linproc"], "module": "project-manager", "name": "Project Manager", "executable": "Project Manager", "args": [], "build_task": fun _ -> "Hello, World!" } |> Config.map ~`

Train Simulator's 'Classic of Steam' is one of the most popular lines in the series. This western themed version of Train Simulator's Classic of Steam has a selection of locomotives that have made the long journey from the east to the west, and for the first time in the series, you can view western countryside from a steam engine's eyes. The Great Western Railway was formed in 1846, bringing commercial development to the western half of the UK. At its peak, the GWR network stretched from the Severn to the North Sea and included many of the country's major cities. Train Simulator's Classic of Steam series returns with a new approach to the series. The West is back.

Migrant Deaths Reach a Record High 2,519 people have been confirmed dead from the Mediterranean between Friday, October 21, and Sunday, October 23, a record number. Out of the deaths, 590 were confirmed to be people passing through the Greek island of Kos. Over 2,200 migrants have died while trying to cross the Mediterranean from Libya to Europe since April. The IOM says that approximately half of the deaths have been recorded in the past two weeks. The rest of the recorded deaths occurred in the last two months of 2014 and in 2013. IOM spokesperson Flavio Di Giacomo told Reuters that there were "about 40,000-50,000 people still in Libya." He said that IOM has rescued people in the Mediterranean "literally daily since November" and has found "clear evidence" that "the flows are sustained by smuggling networks and people-smugglers." Since the start of 2014, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) has received more than 110,000 refugees from Syria alone, most of which are coming through Turkey and the Greek islands. An average of 1,500 migrants and refugees have been brought into Italy daily since the start of the year, and on most days, the UNHCR says, they have been trying to cross into Southern Europe instead of to Northern Africa. Most of these people are fleeing from the civil war in Syria, but also from Eritrea, Ethiopia, and Sudan. "It's the Mediterranean; it is totally the Mediterranean," said an Italian government official, who asked to remain anonymous. "I was born there. I have been all my life in the
