Tip Photoshop is available for Windows, Mac OS, and Linux operating systems. It runs fine on most laptops, but do make sure to have a _spinning hard drive_ in case you run into a problem, such as an unexpected hard drive crash. If you're coming from Windows, your first task is to install a full-blown version of Windows. Mac OS X operating systems require a Mac computer. One of the great things about Photoshop is that you can use it on a variety of operating systems. What is great about this is that, if you have Adobe Creative Suite, you can install Photoshop onto any of your computers, regardless of operating system, and have access to all of the same features. It makes for a powerful, all-in-one package. This is not the case for other editors. * * * #

Q: xsl: when to use xsl:for-each in xsl:when statement I am going through the following tutorial on creating a node of type show: In the tutorial there is the following: Please note the xsl:otherwise below that doesn't seem to have an xsl:when or xsl:otherwise.... so how does the xsl:for-each effect the use of the xsl:otherwise? A: xsl:otherwise is a shorter way of writing xsl:choose, and xsl:when is a shorter way of writing xsl:choose, too. So what the tutorial is doing is writing the opposite of the xsl:choose. If you use xsl:otherwise with any condition, it will act as the "default" for that condition. So if there is an xsl:otherwise, and this is not a test that should be done, it will always be done regardless of the xsl:when condition. So, given

Hydrogen gas can be produced using non-thermal plasma heating of a metal organic solution, such as, for example, an aqueous solution of ferrous nitrate and tetraethyl-orthosilicate. Examples of other applications which utilize non-thermal plasma heating include electrochemical oxidation of organic compounds, such as silane, to form silicon oxide and hydrogen gas, and electrochemical fuel cells. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 6,525,041 to Kujawski et al. describes the conversion of silane to SiO₂ and hydrogen using a low-temperature plasma. U.S. Pat. No. 6,642,083 to Wolford et al. and U.S. Pat. No. 6,851,484 to Wolford et al. describe the conversion of organics such as methane, acetylene, olefins, organic acids, and alcohols to hydrogen gas using a solid-phase system having a plasma reactor.
